Embargo Policy

The authors of manuscripts accepted for publication by Frontiers in Ecology and the Environment agree to abide by the following embargo policies:

- All authors will keep their paper a privileged document and will not release any part of the paper to the press or public before the embargo date.
  - The embargo date corresponds to the date of publication of the manuscript.
  - To determine your paper's embargo date, e-mail Sue Silver at SueSilver@esa.org.
  - Papers may be released to news media or the public prior to the embargo date if:
    - The authors obtain an Advance Proof of their manuscript from Frontiers.
    - Recipients of the Advance Proof agree to refrain from referencing the embargoed paper in any news medium until after the embargo date.
- The main findings of a paper should not be reported in the media prior to a paper's publication.
  - Specifically, authors should decline participation in news briefings or coverage in press releases relating to the particular research findings reported in embargoed papers until after the embargo date.
  - Authors should also refrain from granting interviews or providing copies of figures or data from the manuscript to any reporter, unless the reporter agrees to refrain from referencing the embargoed paper in any news medium until after the embargo date.
- Authors are permitted to distribute copies of their papers to colleagues and within the research community prior to the embargo date, as long as the copies are clearly marked with the embargo date / "In press".
- Authors are permitted to present their data at scientific conferences and seminars, but should not overtly seek media attention.
  - If a reporter attends an author's session at a meeting and writes a story based only on the presentation, such coverage will not affect consideration of the author's paper.
- After the embargo date has passed, authors may distribute copies of their manuscript as they wish, including posting the manuscript on personal or institution websites.
